John Logan is Professor of Sociology and director of Spatial Structures in the Social Sciences (S4) at Brown University. He is an urban sociologist (Urban Fortunes: The Political Economy of Place) who makes much use of spatial concepts in studies of residential patterns in U.S. and Chinese cities. In a current project he has geocoded the addresses of residents of 39 U.S. cities in 1880, and he is using these data to develop new approaches to studying segregation and identifying ethnic neighborhoods.
